MIGRATIONS. From Conflict and Hate to Healing and Hope

This event is organized by the Department of Humanities and the Community Psychology Laboratory of the University Federico II, IAPS (Italian American Psychological Society), and “Psicologi per la Responsabilità Sociale” in collaboration with AIP (Associazione Italiana di Psicologia), CNOP, PSICAMP (Ordine degli Psicologi Nazionale e della Regione Campania), Psy.com and SIPCO. This conference will be characterized by a diversity of contributions in the form of oral communications, round tables, symposia, and cultural events as well as creative activities, aimed at a better understanding of rising global social-psychological and mental-health problems, highlighted, but not limited to, the migrant crisis, rising nationalism, stereotyping, bullying, and youth depression. The intent of this conference is to generate a coherent understanding of these and related issues, and to highlight possible solutions. We are pleased to invite you to attend this event by joining us in Naples on October 2019.

At the start of the new millennium, a great tension has surfaced, between calls for change and challenges to the status quo, and an equally strong resistance to identity diffusion that has precipitated nationalist tendencies.

From the “Arab spring” to Syria, cultural, economic, and political issues, as well as widespread access to social media are leading to greater demand for entrance and exits across borders. Perceptions of flux in the social order has led many individuals to seek a greater sense of rootedness in national, community, religious, or racial identity. Witness Brexit. Viewed positively, these identity-building strategies inspire hope for preserving cherished customs and traditions, and for cultivating a renewed sense of community. Viewed negatively, destabilization can stoke fears of the “other”, leading to radicalized identities, a growing attraction to fundamentalism and populism, as well as terrorism and hate crimes.

For Italians and Italian Americans, current migrant struggles trigger thoughts of the heavy toll laid upon the South by the North after the unification of Italy, as well as the great exodus to the United States in the early and mid-20th century. Southern Italians and Italian American immigrants were equally maligned minorities, considered “lower-class” in every sense, from intelligence and work ethic to culture and aesthetics.

Around the globe, wellbeing and happiness are strongly related to organizational and community factors. However, mental health concerns fail to receive the same level of political, economic, or cultural support as physical health issues. Nevertheless, one in nine individuals in the world suffers from an anxiety disorder. One in ten have clinical depression or a substance use disorder. Aside from the toll of suffering, mental health issues cost billions in lost productivity each year.

With these issues in mind, there is a great need for psychologists from both Italy and the United States to come together to share their knowledge and insights. Specifically, how can existing psychological knowledge related to migration issues, inform future scientific and technological responses as well as cultural and political advances? What additional research is required on this topic? In the meantime, how can psychologists address the potential emotional, social, and behavioral fallout from spontaneous and forced migration?

While rooted in American history, politics, and culture, members of the Italian American Psychological Society (IAPS) share an Italian legacy. The powerful combination of personal and professional insights regarding integration will provide insights on the hidden face of migration and colonial power. At the same time, Italian psychologists intimately aware of “Italy’s “north-south” problems can share lessons, challenges, and success stories from their historical vantage point.

Lastly, how do Italian American psychologists derive a sense of integration and meaning from their personal and professional identities? What strategies prove useful in the U.S. for navigating either the applied or academic career track? Which forms of collective action succeed in advancing the field at the local or national level? From the perspective of Italian psychologists, what are the greatest mental health needs of the existing Italian population, and the newly arriving refugees? What are the unique challenges confronting the growth and advancement of Psychology in Italy?

The Italian American Psychological Society members and the Italian psychologists participating, represent leading figures in social, political, and community psychology with expertise in the major conference themes.

Attendees include prominent social, clinical, and experimental American psychologists, including a former president of APA, former APA Division presidents, and editors of leading scientific psychology journals.

In summary, in Naples on October 4-6, a landmark meeting will take place to discuss psychological aspects of globalism, diversity and exclusion, and advancement of the psychology profession.

The conference continues the commitment of the organizing bodies in dealing with wellness and inclusion issues.

Migrazioni. Dal conflitto e dall'odio alla cura e alla speranza

Il convegno internazionale "From conflict and Hate to Healing and Hope" si terrà a Napoli dal 4 al 6 ottobre 2019.

Questo evento è organizzato dal Dipartimento di Studi Umanistici e dal Community Psychology Lab dell'Università Federico II, IAPS (Italian American Psychological Society), Psy.com e "Psicologi per la Responsabilità sociale" in collaborazione con AIP (Associazione Italiana di Psicologia) e Ordine degli Psicologi della Regione Campania.

La conferenza sarà caratterizzata da numerosi contributi sotto forma di presentazioni orali, tavole rotonde, simposi ed eventi culturali, così come attività creative riguardanti le e le azioni per il cambiamento sociale.

Siamo lieti di invitarvi a partecipare a questo evento unendovi a noi a Napoli nell'ottobre 2019.

All'inizio del nuovo millennio, stiamo assistendo a una grande tensione tra le esigenze di cambiamento e i richiami allo status quo unitamente a una spinta identitaria che ha precipitato le tendenze nazionalistiche.

Dalla Primavera Araba alla Siria, questioni culturali, economiche e politiche, così come un diffuso accesso ai social media stanno portando a un accrescimento della domanda di ingresso e uscita dai confini. La percezione dei cambiamenti nell'ordine sociale ha portato molte persone a cercare un maggior senso di radicamento nell'identità nazionale, comunitaria, religiosa o razziale. Di ciò è testimone Brexit. Viste positivamente, queste strategie di costruzione dell'identità ispirano la speranza di preservare costumi e tradizioni amate e di coltivare un rinnovato senso di comunità. Vista negativamente, la destabilizzazione può alimentare la paura dell'"altro", portando a identità radicalizzate, una crescente attrazione per il fondamentalismo e il populismo, così come i crimini di terrorismo e di odio.

Per gli italiani e gli italoamericani, gli attuali scontri in materia di migrazioni portano alla memoria il pesante tributo del Sud al Nord dopo l'unificazione dell'Italia, nonché il grande esodo verso gli Stati Uniti all'inizio e alla metà del XX secolo. Italiani meridionali e immigrati italo-americani erano minoranze ugualmente denigrate, considerate "di classe inferiore" in tutti i sensi, dall'intelligenza, dall'etica del lavoro, dalla cultura e dall'estetica.

In tutto il mondo, il benessere e la felicità sono strettamente legati a fattori di organizzazione sociale e delle comunità, ma le preoccupazioni per la salute mentale non ricevono lo stesso supporto politico, economico o culturale dei problemi di salute fisica. Tuttavia, un individuo su nove nel mondo soffre di un disturbo d'ansia. Uno su dieci ha una depressione clinica o un disturbo da uso di sostanze. A parte il prezzo della sofferenza, ogni anno i problemi di salute mentale costano miliardi in perdita di produttività.

Tenendo conto di questi problemi, c'è un grande bisogno che gli psicologi dell'Italia e degli Stati Uniti si uniscano per condividere le loro conoscenze e intuizioni. In particolare, in che modo la conoscenza psicologica delle questioni migratorie potrà fornire ulteriori risposte scientifiche e tecnologiche nonché progressi culturali e politici? Quali ulteriori ricerche sono necessarie su questo argomento? Nel frattempo, come possono gli psicologi affrontare le potenziali ricadute sociali, comportamentali ed emotive della migrazione spontanea e forzata?

Pur essendo radicati nella storia, nella politica e nella cultura americane, i membri IAPS condividono un'eredità italiana. La potente combinazione di intuizioni personali e professionali sull'integrazione fornirà informazioni sul volto nascosto della migrazione e del potere coloniale. Allo stesso tempo, gli psicologi italiani, intimamente consapevoli dei problemi "nord-sud" dell'Italia, possono condividere lezioni, sfide e storie di successo.

Infine, in che modo gli psicologi italo-americani traggono un senso di integrazione e significato dalle loro identità personali e professionali? Quali strategie si rivelano utili negli Stati Uniti nei percorsi della carriera applicata o accademica? Quali forme di azione collettiva riescono a far progredire il contesto a livello locale o nazionale? Dal punto di vista degli psicologi italiani, quali sono i maggiori bisogni di salute mentale della popolazione italiana esistente e dei rifugiati appena arrivati? Quali sono le singole sfide che affrontano la crescita e il progresso della psicologia in Italia?

I membri della American Psychological Society e gli psicologi italiani sono figure di spicco della psicologia sociale, politica e della comunità con esperienza e competenza nei principali temi della conferenza.

I partecipanti includono eminenti psicologi americani, sociali, clinici e sperimentali, tra cui un ex presidente dell'APA, ex presidenti della divisione APA e redattori di importanti riviste di psicologia scientifica.

In sintesi, a Napoli dal 4 al 6 ottobre, si terrà un incontro storico per discutere gli aspetti psicologici del globalismo, della diversità e dell'esclusione e il progresso della professione psicologica.

La conferenza continua l'impegno degli organismi organizzatori nell'affrontare problemi di benessere e inclusione.
